

All about Jaime Rowley

Who am I?

Hello! I am an Educational Psychologist. I love spending time outside, particularly walking, cycling and swimming in the sea! People say that I am friendly, positive, a good listener and hard working.

What do I do?

As an Educational Psychologist, I go into schools and meet with pupils, parents and staff. My job is to help to make school a place where pupils feel happy and where they have the right support to build upon their strengths and overcome any barriers to learning.

What is important to me?

I do this job because it is important to me that every child feels happy in school.

What to expect when you meet me:

When you meet me, I might come and visit your classroom, we might complete some games or activities together. I will ask you about the things you enjoy in school and the things you find more difficult. I might meet with your parents and school staff. We will think together about any changes that could be made in school.

How best to communicate with me:
